LA FAYETTE.

From a sunny sphere he came
To our dark and clouded land,
Yet no hopes of future fame
Nerved his spirit or his hand—
For the song which Freedom breathes,
Had been whispered to his ear,
And the garland she enwreathes
To his soul was very dear.

Youth was smiling on his bœuf,
Age had never dimmed its fire,
When he breathed the ardent vow
Freedom's spirit can inspire;
And a Vision of her light,
Which should bœst o'er every stream,
In the stillness of the night,
Blessed the young man's buoyant dream!

There are places that can tell
Of endurance and of pain,
While he sought the holy spell
Freedom breathes in every strain—
In the battle's sternest shock
He had ever vowed to be,
Till each mountain and each rock
Of our country should be free.

Like a vision, to the brain
Comes that scene in bright array,
When the Patriot's smile again
Blessed our people with its ray;
Thousands welcomed to the spot,
Where his spirit loved to be,
The aged unforget,
Who had helped to make it free.

From a far, but sunny clime,
Mingled tones of grief and love
Marked the moment and the time
When his spirit went above;
Nations wept for Freedom's loss,
And for him, who, in her cause,
Firmly bore aloft the cross
In devotion to her laws.

Though our People may not tread
On the calm and holy soil,
Where reclines the noble dead,
Whose pure soul hath passed to God—
Yet their hearts will steal away,
In each hour of joy or gloom,
To that spot where Freedom's ray
Lights the lofty hero's tomb.

TO —.

The dove that found no rest,
To which her foot might cling,
Turned to the ark her drooping least,
Turned back her weary wing;
Still she clung, and clung, clung over
All vestige of her promised home;
Yet from the crested waves she bore
An emblem of the rest to come.

And thus, my weary soul,
Upon the world's wide sea,
Tossed, as the stormy waters roll,
Turns back, dear love, to thee!
Still thou art far, oh, how far;
And fainting hope grows like despair;
Yet, through the gloomy night, one ray
Of starry promise glitters there.

A GRAND BALL IN NEW YORK.

The New York Star gives the following account of the Birth Day Ball in that city:—

"We do not know of any Ball, since the celebrated Greek Ball, surpassing in splendor the one given at Niblo's last evening, by the Third Regiment, commanded by Col. Morris. The Concert Saloon was elegantly embellished and ornamented on the occasion, with flags of the different regiments, which were suspended from the galleries—rays of bunting from the centre of the dome, were attached to, and entwined around the pillars—burnished arms, field pieces, tents, marques, cannon ball, and all the 'pomp, pride and circumstance of glorious war,' met the eye in every direction—even suits of armor, worn probably at the battles of Cressy and Agincourt, rested in the recesses of the room—a fine whole length portrait of Washington, and other paintings and transparencies, were distributed through the saloon. The brilliant uniforms of the generals and officers, mingled with the splendor of female dresses and female charms, created a dazzling effect—while so many hundred were, at the same time, going through the giddy mazes of the dance.

About 10 o'clock, the whole company opened to the right and left, while the commandant of the French ship-of-war, now in port, with his officers, the Consul-general of France, his Honor the Mayor, Major-General Morton and Staff, with the committee, and the Colonel-commandant of the regiment, entered—and walked down to the extremity of the room—the band playing the Marseilles hymn, followed by Hail Columbia. After a cordial welcome, the dancing recommenced, when the French officers and invited guests repaired to the marquee on the left, to supper, where toasts were drank to perpetual peace between the two countries, which were handsomely reciprocated by the distinguished strangers, who retired highly gratified, a little before one o'clock, the whole company cheering them on their departure.

The grand supper tables were laid out in the great covered walk which was enclosed—made warm with stoves, and all the choice plants—the blooming orange trees and geraniums were ranged on each side, shedding their perfume around and looking like mid summer. The tables, it is scarcely necessary to say, did ample justice to the taste of our worthy host, Mr Niblo, than whom no one better understands what is indispensable on such occasions. We are decidedly of opinion, that for a grand entertainment this is the spot. The company must have remained until a very early hour in the morning, such was the hilarity and gratification experienced on the occasion."

THE BOA CONSTRICTOR.

Nearly a hundred miles below Calcutta, at the embouchure of the Hougley, is the delta of the streams and creeks, all of which are salt except those which communicate immediately with the principal arm of the sacred river; these numerous canals being so disposed as to form a complete inland navigation. A few years before our visit to Calcutta, the captain of a country ship, while passing the Sunderbunds, sent a boat into one of the creeks to get some fresh fruits which are cultivated by the few miserable inhabitants of this inhospitable region. Having reached the shore, the crew moored the boat under a bank, and left one of their party to take care of her. During their absence, the lascar, who remained in charge of the boat, overcame by heat, lay under the seat and fell asleep. Whilst he was in this happy state of unconsciousness, and enor-

THE ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

The Centinel, of Thursday, contains a curious article which was intended for a defence of Mr Poindexter, against the suspicion of having been accessory to the attempted assassination of the President. The article is very clumsy put together, and we are sure that in view of it, and all others like it, Mr Poindexter may well exclaim, "Save me from my friends!" We make the following extracts; the italics are our own, the opinions belong to the Centinel—

"It is sufficiently evident that Lawrence was a maniac. Mr Poindexter would have been equally mad to have consorted with such a wretch in a conspiracy against the life of any man. * * * But under no circumstances would he be such a fool and madman as to place himself in the power of such a miscreant as Lawrence, by engaging him to murder the President. Such an idea is absurd in the extreme."

Lawrence's unfitness for the job, and not Mr Poindexter's aversion to it, seems to be the reason here assigned why the latter should be considered innocent.

The Centinel is quite sure that Mr Poindexter would not have "consorted with such a wretch," but does not even express an opinion that he would not "consort," for a similar purpose, with some other "wretch" better qualified to screen him from ultimate punishment.

If this is the ground upon which Mr Poindexter is to be placed by his friends, he had better "take heed lest he fall."

If they tacitly admit that he might have "consorted" with some other person to murder the President, the admission would certainly seem to afford some ground for suspecting him in the present instance; for who knows but he might have been deceived in Lawrence, whose promises anterior to the act may have been broken by his subsequent conduct. We are astonished that the Centinel did not prize of Mr Poindexter's high sense of honor, of his chivalrous courage, and of the purity of his past life; but, perhaps, our neighbor thought that if Poindexter was cowarded by his own servant, it might cast a shade upon the first—his galloping from the battle field at New Orleans to apply brandy and brown paper to a pretended wound, and his running away from Natchez to escape a duel, fix a blot upon the second—and his course of life at Washington, utterly obliterate the third. So, perhaps, it was wise (and it is the only mark of wisdom we see about the article) to abstain from vain boasting upon these points.

But here is another piece of precious reasoning from the same source:—

"Mr Poindexter has solemnly declared that he never saw Lawrence before the attempt was made on the life of the President. There is no reason to doubt his declaration."

"No reason to doubt his declaration?" If he would "consort" with assassins, (no matter how high their qualifications might be) would he not deny it? If he would connive at murder, would he not lie? Most certainly he would. If we were to defend Mr Poindexter, as the Centinel has, by insinuating, and pretty broadly too, that his prudence (not his principles), is the guarantee of his innocence, we should be accused of assaulting his private character in terms too gross to be endured—but if Mr P. is satisfied to be thus "damned with faint praise," (and very faint it is,) we have no right to complain.

Whether Mr Poindexter is innocent or guilty, his plan of getting a certificate of character from the Senate does credit to his sagacity—he may "consort" with Mr Bidle's Senators with perfect safety—he may "place himself in their power," without fearing for the result—they have not struck at the life of the President, but they have attempted to assassinate what is dearer to him than even life itself, his reputation and his good name.

Since the above was written, we have received the affidavits referred to, with an accompanying article from the Globe, which will be found in this paper. The Centinel, of yesterday, contains a second article upon the subject, which betrays, if possible, more weakness and stupidity, combined with a petty malignity towards the President, altogether unworthy a print claiming to echo the opinions of respectable men. We quote from it, as follows:—

"The correspondence, the affidavits, and the course proceedings thus far brought to light, leads us to the decisive conclusion, that the whole concatenation of circumstances connected with this mysterious affair, involves a most dangerous conspiracy against the character of Mr Poindexter. We believe firmly, that Lawrence was procured to make an ostensible attempt to assassinate the President on a public occasion—that the pistols were carefully prepared to snap without going off—that the plan was to pretend that the supposed assassin had been employed by Mr Poindexter to kill the President.

To favor this charge, it is altogether probable, that he was procured to call repeatedly, before the attempt, at the lodgings of that Senator, with a view to make it appear that Mr Poindexter had been an accomplice before the fact."

On Thursday, Sir Oracle thought it was "sufficiently evident that Lawrence was a maniac"—on Friday, it is as clear as day that he was hired to make an ostensible attempt upon the life of the President, by his own friends, for the purpose of injuring that which has no existence except in imagination, the good character of George Poindexter—to-day, we should not be surprised if he were to deny that there was any attempt at assassination made. We are not astute enough to see anything in the advices received on Thursday, to authorise such a miraculous change of opinion—on the contrary, those advices go to fix upon Mr P. a strong suspicion, which we should not be surprised to see open into indisputable fact.

We quote further:—

"It will be remembered that, at the moment after the attempt at assassination, the President himself openly charged Mr Poindexter with having procured the assailant to assassinate him? This is a most extraordinary circumstance."

The evident design of this language is to fix upon

President JACKSON the stigma of having participated in a conspiracy against Mr Poindexter, and in the hiring of a bravo to make an ostensible attempt upon his own life! We cannot persuade ourselves to feel any thing like resentment towards a man capable of writing and publishing such a charge!—We pity, sincerely pity him—we pity his friends, and his readers—but more than all, we pity him. Immeasurably vain, and equally foolish he must be to expect such trash will be believed for a single moment, or regarded with any other feelings than those of the most searching contempt. The paradox puts absurdly itself to the blush.

But the assertion that the President charged Poindexter with a part in the affair, is not true. The President exclaimed that he "knew the rascal who set him [Lawrence] on"—he merely cut the coat, which the crowd so easily fitted upon Poindexter's back—the President said he knew the rascal, and the spectators supposed (of course?) he meant Poindexter! If he would have been "extraordinary" for the President to have imputed the attempt to an individual who had publicly threatened to "SHOOT HIM WHEREVER HE SAW HIM," was it not more "extraordinary" that a crowd of spectators who only knew Poindexter by his general conduct, should at once connect his name, by general consent, with the attempted assassination?

As to the suggestion that President Jackson or his friends wish Poindexter dead, it is worthy of its source. P's friends might be willing to bury him and his faults together; but his worst enemy could not wish him a severer punishment than to live and complete the life he has begun.

We have not room to notice the remainder of the article in the Centinel, which is upon a par with the extracts we have made. The article from the Globe, and the affidavits which we published yesterday, speak for themselves. That Mr Poindexter should be supported and defended by the party to which he belongs, and by a majority of the Senate, is to be expected—but in view of the evidence produced, "one can't help his doubts." If he is proved guilty, it will excite no surprise in our mind—if he prove himself innocent, we may think differently of his prudence, but not of his principles.

From the Washington Globe, Feb. 23.³

Poindexter.—In our Congressional Proceedings will be found an account of a most singular movement made by Poindexter. We give below the letters between himself and the Hon. Dutee J. Pearce, together with the affidavits referred to in the correspondence; and that the subject may be precisely understood by the public, we add a narrative of some circumstances connected with it.

A day or two after the attempted assassination of the President, the Honourable Joel K. Mann, mentioned to some members of Congress, that a gentleman who boarded in the same house, informed him, that Mr Poindexter had interviews with Lawrence, but a few days before the attempt on the President's life. This information produced considerable sensation. A Captain of high standing in the Navy had previously stated in this city that Poindexter, on his voyage from New Orleans, had threatened to demand satisfaction for the remark made about him by the President, as reported in an anonymous letter to the Baltimore Patriot, saying if the President refused, that he would shoot him wherever he saw him. This threat of Poindexter's was vouchsafed upon such authority as to give considerable uneasiness to several of the President's friends, and among others, to the Rev Mr Hatch, Chaplain to the Senate, who called on the President to put him on his guard against Poindexter. Mr Ward, another gentleman of the Navy, who had probably heard of these threats, was at Mr Stewart's, (a respectable mechanic of this city, whose business brought him into an acquaintance with Lawrence) on the Sunday after the attempt of Lawrence, and Mr Stewart mentioned to him the circumstance of seeing Lawrence in conversation with Poindexter on the Tuesday preceding the event which happened on Friday.

Mr Ward mentioned it to the Honourable Joel K. Mann, and from the interest taken in it by several to whom he mentioned it, Mr Ward was induced to call on Mr Stewart, to be sure that he had not misunderstood him. Mr Stewart assured him that what he had told him was true, and although he expressed some apprehension that the publicity of his having made the statement might effect his business injuriously, yet declared his willingness to make oath to it. He was advised to do so by several of his friends. We have been informed that Duff Green and Seator Ewing, both called upon him, and endeavored to induce him not to promulgate the fact. He, however, felt it due to those who had repeated the circumstances, on his authority, to give the statement a definite and authentic shape, and he voluntarily made and sent his affidavit to the President.

Whether Mr Poindexter is innocent or guilty, his plan of getting a certificate of character from the Senate does credit to his sagacity—he may "consort" with Mr Bidle's Senators with perfect safety—he may "place himself in their power," without fearing for the result—they have not struck at the life of the President, but they have attempted to assassinate what is dearer to him than even life itself, his reputation and his good name.

POLICE COURT.

Mrs Ann McCabe, a lady of very meek and humble pretensions, was a little surprised at his honor's asking her how she spelt her name, and replied to the question, that she had never learned to read or spell; his honor then proposed the letters M, a, e, (Mac) and C, a, b, e, (Cabe), McCabe—and she consented to the orthography by a silent shrug; but notwithstanding her ignorance respecting her own affairs, she knew enough about poor Peter Grugin's, to cause his arrest, for being a common drunkard, and a "most dangerous savage." Her testimony touching his high misdemeanors, was given with great force, simplicity, and pathos—yea, in a style, that in truth, "when unadorned, was adorned the most." The question being formally propounded to her, "if she had ever seen Peter Grugin drunk," she replied:—

"I never saw him a grate dale sober—he is drunk almost all the while, and has no time to be sober; he has soult every thing and rag in his house for liquor, and his wife has never a bit of nothing left to ate, but a black bay-pot—

Pater—Ah, now, Missus McCabe, as you call yourself—didnt I carry home a large piece of salt meat, that I had for helping Mike wid his wood?

Mrs McCabe—Yes, Pater, that ye did; and right well ye know that ye traded it off at the next shop for a small matter of onions, and a pint of rum—and by the same token, your wife and chilt has fasted these two days; and the nabors' hearts felt for her and the poor babe, and took them in, but couldnt bear to have you railing backward and forward living on them—especially asfher you soult her cloak for ninepence, and got drunk on the money.

True as this story unquestionably was, it was necessary to sustain it by a second witness, who appeared in the person of a Mr McVity:—

McVity—Oh no, inadie; I could not swear I ever saw him actually drunk.

Mag—What do you consider being drunk?

This was a problem to McVity; but, with "his daylights fixed upon the ground," and pawing with one foot on the floor, like a horse in a quandary, and abstractedly tracing figures in the sand, with his toe, he seemed to hit upon an original definition, and in about two minutes, with wonder-beaming eyes, and front erect, he elucidated as follows:—

"I should call a man drunk, when he couldnt houl on his legs, nor spake sense, like a rasonable cratere."

Bill reported in a new draft, to encourage the reeling of silk—read and ordered to be printed.

Bill to incorporate the Boston Rice Mill Company, passed to be enacted.

Bill concerning Three Rivers Bridge, in the town of Palmer, was taken up, and pending a discussion on the same to be enacted, the bill was rejected by a vote of 71 to 128.

A motion was made to re-consider the above vote, which was laid on the table.

Bill to establish a Fire Department in the town of Plymouth, passed to a 3d reading.

Bill concerning bears, wildcats, foxes, &c. was read a second time, amended, and after a serio-ludicrous discussion of some moments duration, was passed to a third reading; Bills to incorporate the proprietors of the West Bradford meeting-house; the African Methodist Episcopal Church in New Bedford; to change the name of the Baptist Missionary Society; to incorporate Grace church, in the city of Boston, severally passed to be engrossed.

The bill concerning Paupers was taken up and pending a discussion on sundry proposed amendments, the House adjourned.

Horrible Catastrophe.—Yesterday about 12 o'clock four men were killed, and eight others most shockingly mangled, while excavating for the Worcester Railroad, at the Big Ledge in Worcester, about a mile this side of the village. A charge had been let off, when the workmen, supposing it to be entirely spent, approached the spot to resume their labor, when a second explosion took place, of which the above was the melancholy result. The trunk of one man, entirely divested of his limbs, was thrown several rods from the spot into a large oak tree, where it lodged 40 feet from the ground, and the body of another thrown entirely over the same tree. All the sufferers were Irish, with a single exception—a brother of John Ellis, the contractor, who was instantly killed.—Briggs.

Reform.—Yesterday morning our citizens were surprised on entering the Post Office, to find the whole interior of the room changed. The old partition, and old boxes, as if by magic, had disappeared, and in their place had arisen new walls, new mahogany, &c. Instead of one entrance, we have now three, and the area in front of the boxes, which used to be dark and narrow, is now spacious and well lighted. When the improvements are complete, the Portland Post Office will be one of the most convenient and elegant in the country. We have heard but one opinion expressed relative to this Reform. All agree in praising the new arrangement, and concur in approving the liberality and taste of our new Post-master, General Todd, who has made these changes, as it is understood, at his own expense.—Portland Argus.

Havana, Feb. 10.—[Correspondence of the Transcript.] This afternoon there was a grand parade of troops, and more display than I have seen before since I have been in the city. The occasion of it was this: The Captain General has just received despatches from Spain, announcing that the Cortes has decreed the expatriation of Don Carlos and his family from Spain, forever. The Proclamation to this effect was promulgated by the authorities to-day with great pomp.

O'Rourke, the pugilist, who lately won a pitched battle and two thousand dollars at New Orleans, in a letter to the editor of the Bee, says—"I understand that the friends of my late antagonist offer to back their man against me again, for thirty thousand dollars, It is true they have over-sized my PILL, but if they will stake one thousand dollars only, I will treat them to a dozen of the best champagne New Orleans can furnish, and we will then give the city another day's sport."

The New Orleans Courier of the 30th ult. says—"That during the blow yesterday, a pirogue, having on board two negroes and a negro woman, were unfortunately drowned while crossing the river by upsetting.—We also learn that the wall of a large brick sugar house, in the faubourg Lafayette, was blown down and several negroes killed."

On the 7th inst., a farmer at Sibas, in the Basse Pyrenees, killed a jackall, which in the course

RODGERS' IMPERIAL STOCKS.

(Opposite the Post Office, Boston.)

WILLIAM H. RODGERS, most respectfully invites the attention of Merchant Tailors and the public generally, to his new invented Imperial Stocks for the Neck, which for ease and elegance very far surpass every thing of the kind hitherto manufactured in the vicinity. They are of scientifically; the materials and mode of working are quite different from those in common use, and they may be saved many hours, and require not exactly the same shape as when first made. W. H. requests permission to enumerate the usual faults in the common Stocks, viz: 1st, the very inferior materials used, 2d, their sitting away from the chin and exposing the neck, when disagreeably close to the bottom, 3d, the edge at the top being uncomfortably tight, as to cause a distortion of the features by moving the head, 4th, that of their bulging out at the sides, by moving the head a little downwards, which has a most distasteful appearance. By W. H. Rogers' deservedly admired and extensively patronized invention, all these faults are completely removed. The most eminent and literary gentlemen will find them the most pleasing and durable. Made to order of any texture, by the dozen or single, at the lowest cash prices. Ladies Riding Stocks beautifully made to order.
